Town & District

Miss Jean McConnell of Calgary spent a day in town last week visiting her many friends here.

Now that the world series baseball games are over the local fans can get down to the serious business of earning a living. A lot of the fans following every game from the beginning to the end.

Some fifty teachers in Indian schools from Edmonton south to U.S. States border will hold their annual convention October 10 to 17 at the Old Sun Indian residential school south of town. Arrangements for the three-day meeting will be under the direction of L. G. P. Wall, inspector of the Indian Affairs branch of the department of citizenship and immigration.

Can you tell me where this road leads to? asked the man in the car. No, replied the farmer. I understand you can reach Gleichen by following it but I couldn't tell you where it goes after that.

A Joint Rally Day and Thanksgiving service by the United Church Sunday School will be held at 11 a.m. next Sunday, October 12th. Parents are especially invited.

One man cannot build a town. It requires the concerted action of the citizens. When one man shoulders a town and attempts to carry it there are always a lot of people who are ready to jump on top of the load. Unity of action is a sure thing.

Special Thanksgiving service will be held in the United Church next Sunday evening at 7:30. Everybody cordially invited to attend.

Mrs. Camps underwent an operation in a Calgary hospital last week and latest reports she is doing well.

Angus McLeay who has been confined to a Calgary hospital for the past couple weeks with a broken shoulder and other injuries is recovering. He was up a telephone pole when it broke and in falling suffered serious injury.

We do not like to see any line of business over done, but we desire to see each one prosper. A town that is over supplied in any one line of business cannot prosper as will the town where there is the proper proportion. We should not encourage any man to locate here to engage in any business already sufficiently represented, but if any new business seeks a location and there is a demand for that business, let us give it all the encouragement and patronage we can after it is located. There are many ways to boost a town. Let us study them and put them in practice.

THE CASE FOR REDUCED LIVESTOCK MARKETING

The current cattle and sheep marketing situation in Western Canada suggests that it would be most useful for every producer to give serious thought to the possibility of holding out from the market a maximum number of such livestock states H. J. Hargrave, head of the Animal Husbandry Section of the Lethbridge Experimental Station. In recent years he says, there has been a significant shift in the ages at which cattle have been marketed. Operators who formerly sold two and three year old steers are now selling yearlings, and any yearling steers have arrived at a cow and calf basis within the past two or three years. This appears to be an opportune time to carry calves until they are yearlings and the yearlings until they are two. This may also be the time to winter ewe lambs for additions to depleted and over-age breeding flocks rather than send them to the feedlots.

A half ton of hay or straw plus five or six bushels of grain will winter a calf in good condition. Slightly more feed maintains a yearling throughout the winter. If plenty of grass or crop aftermath is available considerably less feed per head will be required for a normal winter. If the outlook for grazing additional numbers next summer is not good, the possibility of putting cattle in the feedlot next spring could be considered.

A yearling generally weighs 300 pounds more than a calf, and a two-year-old weighs 350 pounds more than a yearling. If cattle are wintered exceptionally well these weight spreads will be even wider. If fifteen to twenty dollars worth of feed will winter a calf and $10 worth of grazing will do it to summering, it looks like good business to carry the steer for another year even if prices remain as they now are.

A fortunate combination of circumstances including sound financial position, income tax structure, and an abundant supply of feed should enable most livestock producers to carry over additional numbers without serious dislocation of long-range plans. The present market outlook makes it appear that it would be sound business to hold back as much stock as possible this fall.

MR. AND MRS. FRANK BATES CELEBRATE THEIR SILVER WEDDING

Frank Bates, brother of our postmaster, Theo. Bates, recently celebrated his silver wedding anniversary at Kimberley. The Kimberley paper has the following to say about the event:

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Bates, McLaughlin Townsite, celebrated their 25th wedding anniversary last Friday when eight members of the family gathered at their home for a family dinner.

A single red rose, sitting in a silver combination candy dish and bud vase and flanked by tall white tapered silver holders, was the central dinner theme. The table was graced with a lace cloth made by Mrs. Bates' mother over fifty years ago. The room was a garden brought indoors with its lavish display of sweet peas and gladioli.

A rose corsage was presented to Mrs. Bates by her two sons, Bedford attending U.B.C. and Mervyn, employed by Northam Construction Company at the Wapnetta project, and Dave Kemp, a house guest. Mr. and Mrs. Bates' daughter, Marcia Rose, also were a corsage.

Telegrams and long distance calls of congratulations from friends and relatives who were unable to attend the dinner, were received. Enjoying the social evening which followed the dinner, were many friends of Mr. and Mrs. Bates.

Mr. and Mrs. Bates were married at the Blackfoot Indian Mission at Gleichen, on September 5, 1927. The couple moved to Kimberley in 1934 at which time Mr. Bates commenced his employment with the C. M. & S. Co.

"Do you say your prayers every night, Trudy?" asked the minister. "Oh, no, Mummy says that for me," answered Trudy. "Indeed what does she say?" he queried. "Thank God you are in bed," was the prompt reply.

Friend: "My wife's an angel in three ways." Pal: "Remarkable. How come?" Friend: "Well, first she's always up in the air; second, she's always harping; third, she never has an earthly thing to wear."

Doctors say that eight hours' proper rest in bed will save 7,000 heart beats a day.

"Jim," said the taxi driver's friend, "did you know there's a purple line in the bottom of your car?" "Sure I know it. I put it there and left the door open. You have no idea how many people hop in for a short ride when they see it."

Canada has 22 plants engaged in making mats, carpets and rugs.

OUR SCHOOL

Gleichen Home and School Association held their opening meeting for the year in the Recreation Centre on September 22nd.

After a short business session a talk given by Mr. T. A. Steele, Public Relations director of the Alberta Hotelmen's Association, was enjoyed by all. In his talk Mr. Steele gave a very interesting and informative word picture of Alberta's industrial development. In closing he outlined the Association's Scholarship plan which this year is giving assistance to several young men and women in university.

Production

One can't travel about the country wherever construction work is being done, or visit any of our industrial plants or modern farms, without being impressed by the extent to which our production is due to machinery and accumulated knowledge, and how little is due to our own skill and labour.

We are born into this world with a heritage of knowledge and experience that it took the human race thousands of years to acquire.

Our own contribution to the production of anything seems so small when we compare it with all that was known and done before we started, that we marvel at how much the race has achieved and how little, of all we have, is due to our own efforts. We say that a man is entitled to all the wealth he produces; but how much of any of us claim to have produced? If we had to start with nothing but what we brought into the world with us we could not produce very much in our lifetime. No man ever accomplished anything without drawing on the accumulated knowledge of the past.

The great bulk of all we have and know must be credited to our cultural inheritance.

Why then should any of us claim exclusive title to a thing simply because we happen to be the last ones to work at producing it?

This heritage belongs to the human race and should be available for the use of all. How best can we make it available to all the people?

By reducing the prices of goods and services as fast as new discoveries and improved skills make price reductions possible, we can extend the benefits of progress to a steadily increasing number of people.

It is well that we should keep this in mind in these days when the whole world is organizing itself into groups each aiming to get for itself more than a fair share of the wealth produced.

The darkest hour is when you cannot find the keyhole in the door, and your wife is still awake.

A great institute of learning: "When wealth is lost, nothing is lost; When health is lost, something is lost; When character is lost, all is lost."

Any person who can read, remember, and act on this motto has progressed a long way in life.—Communism.

OUR COMPLETE SHORT STORY—

THE TRAP

By ANNA E. WILSON

DICK'S head felt queer. He was surprised to find that he had been dreaming of his Aunt Sue. He had seen her trap a mouse in a jam jar. She had put cheese in the tilted jar and the mouse had run into it to have the jar spring upright.

His head was wedged against a rock. Above him a patch of blue sky glimmered. He was the mouse in the jar.

It had all happened because the prettiest girl he had ever seen—and because she was going to marry him at three o'clock this afternoon.

Last night she had kissed him and straightened his tie. "Nothing can go wrong now," she'd said. "Oh, Dick, isn't it wonderful!"

It was wonderful that Carine was marrying a graduate engineer instead of her cousin, Dick Taylor, whose business she helped so efficiently to handle.

Dick's firm is open for a new man, she'd said. "He might as well give the job to you as to anybody. It's away off in the mountains and it will be a grand place for a honeymoon."

Dick had looked doubtful. "You're apt to run into all kinds of trouble on this job. I had better not let you go in my mind. One used to handling emergencies."

But Carine had been brisk and efficient. "We'll be married on Saturday, Dick, just as planned. In the meantime Dick may change his mind."

He'd motored home in the moonlight sure that Dick would change his mind; thinking of Carine in satin and orange blossoms. The license would be ready in the morning; the ring was in his dress suit pocket. He whistled.

Dick Was Plagued By a Vision Of Carine Disappearing in a Cloud of Tulle and Orange Blossoms

By ANNA E. WILSON

Sometimes a man can be so happy that he doesn't know what to do with his happiness. He wants to get away by himself and relax and let it flood over him. Dick came to the crossroads and turned out along the deserted road that led to the old crater.

It wasn't a crater really and no one knew what exactly had caused it. Perhaps some mining outfit had blown this hole in the ground with a charge of explosives. Anyway it was there, thirty feet deep, three sides blasted out of sheer rock, the fourth a steep incline of shifting sand.

He stopped his car near the crater and mooned a bit. A small flower, white in the moonlight, had crawled out of the sand. It reminded him of Carine and all at once he had to have it. Love blinds us to danger and his hand was just closing about the blossom when he felt a rumbling and the surface gave way. When he woke up, it was daylight and he was dreaming of a mouse in a jar.

Dick had talked of emergencies. What kind of an engineer fell into a hole in the ground on his wedding day?

He groaned. The walls were impossible. He tried the incline again, sneaking up sideways. In a few minutes he was digging himself out of a fresh shower. He sat down and examined the crater bottom. It was full of stones. He became thoughtful.

He began laying large ones at the bottom and working others securely against the sloping side. It wasn't a crater and it wasn't a mine. If you went carefully it provided a foothold. He was half way up when he stopped briefly to look at his watch. Two hours. He'd never make it now. He went back to work grimly, his muscles ached as he climbed on doggedly in a lather of sweat, and dust. He did not know how long he would be the last stone in place and reached out to try for a handhold. The whole thing came loose in his hand and he rolled ignominiously downward. He picked himself up out of a new shower, almost afraid to look at his handwork.

He knew now that he'd never stand beside Carine at that wedding. He'd be lucky if she didn't drag a protesting Dick Taylor to the altar instead.

He climbed again, taking no chances. He carried his handwork within easy distance of the top.

He lay on the ground, panting. He was plagued by a vision of Carine disappearing in a cloud of tulle and orange blossoms.

The voice was mild but it startled him. "There's coffee in the thermos and a sandwich. I picked up the license and you can wear Carine's brother's suit. If you hurry you can still make it."

He hadn't heard Dick's car and he couldn't believe that Dick was actually there with a Carine who was white and shaky. "Oh, Dick," she sobbed. "I had such a time getting Dick when no one answered your phone. Dick called all the hospitals. He thought of everything but we'd really given up hope when we came to the crossroads and Dick thought he could make out a car behind that scrub. You just crawled out as Dick was getting out to look for you."

Taylor was examining the crater. He looked at Dick's rule stone-work and whistled. Dick and Carine were climbing into Dick's car when Dick called out. "How long do you think it will take you to get ready for that job in the mountains?"
